RESEARCH

Salvador Dalí

His universe of evolution and connections in the 20th century with a focus on the 1960s and 1970s

1 About Dalí 2 People around Dalí 3 Places Dalí went 4 Dalí in Paris, 1967 5 Dalí, watchmaker & jeweller 6 Dalí copied & copying

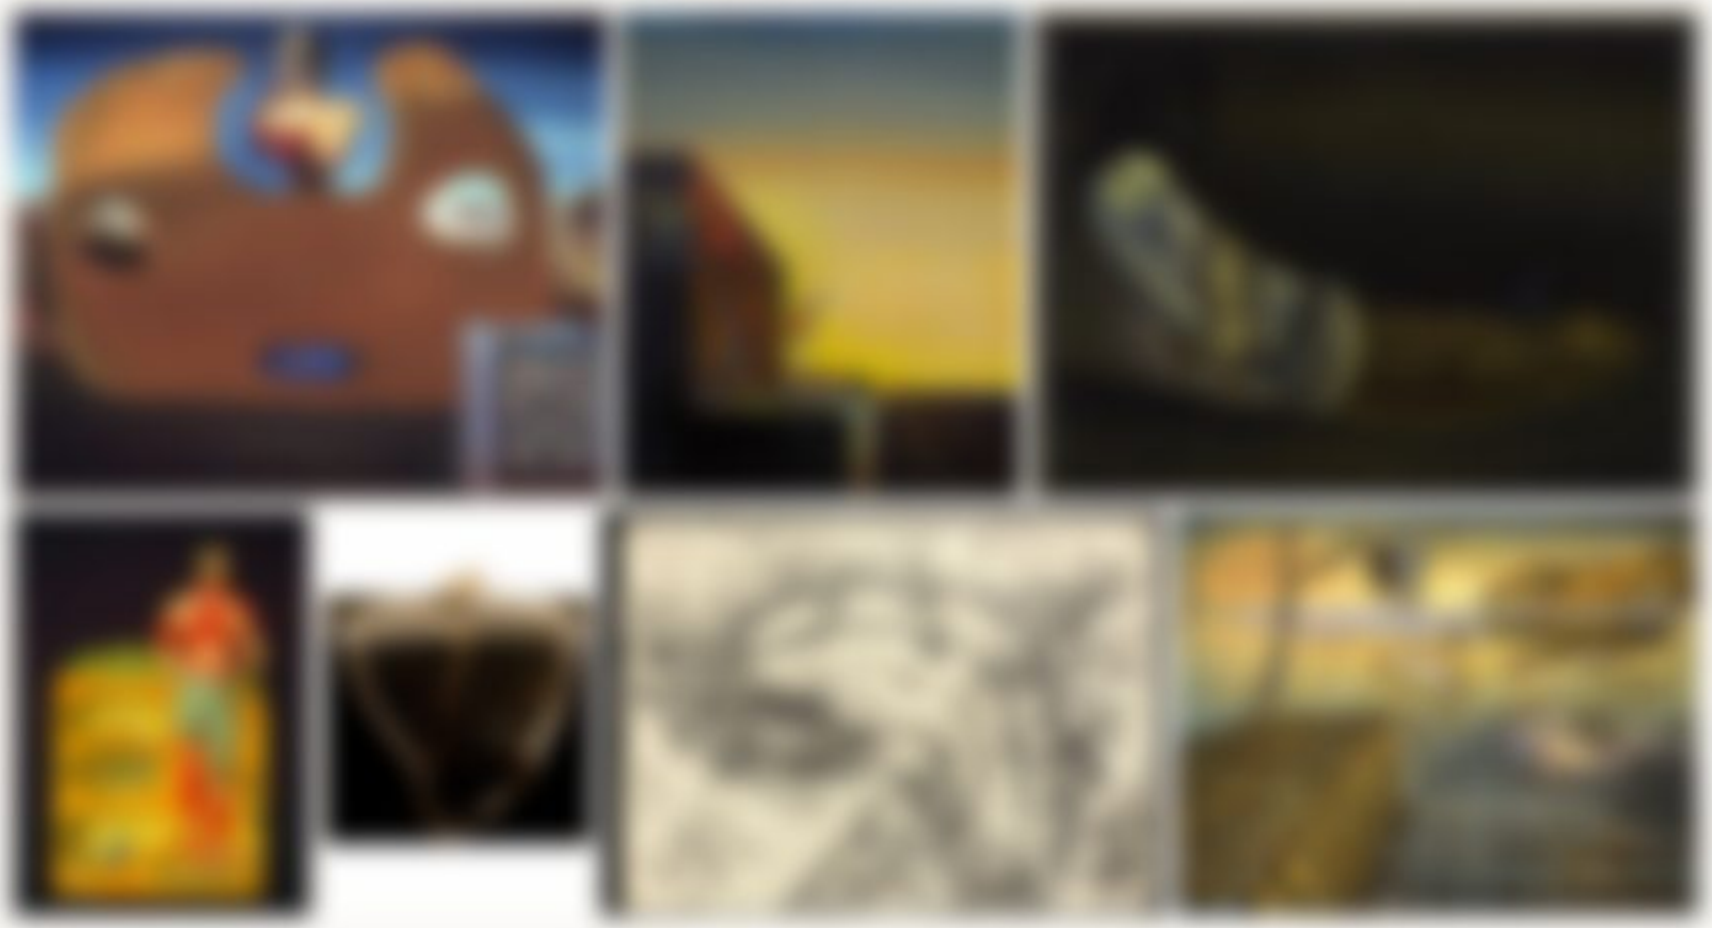

About Dalí

THE PERSISTENCE OF MEMORY

SOFT WATCHES & MELTING FORMS

MAISONS & THEIR CREATORS

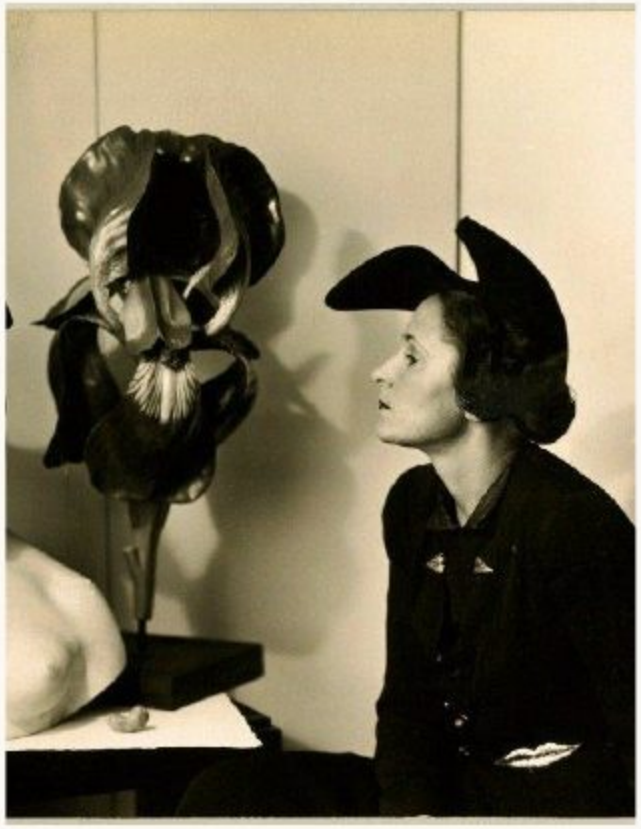

Dalí's close connections with the great fashion houses

COCO CHANEL

CHRISTIAN DIOR

ELSA SCHIAPARELLI

MIA FARROW & CARTIER

THE BALL OF THE CENTURY

Chapter Six

Dalí in Paris, 1961

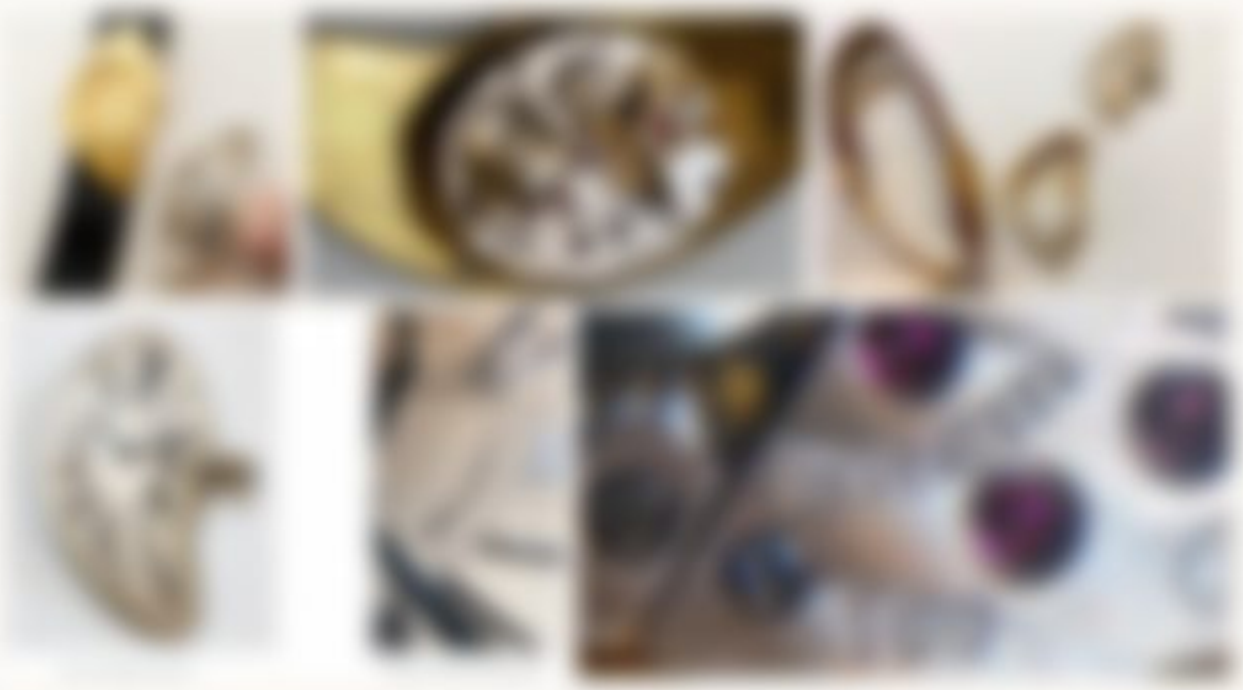

Filmed for television at the Jardin d'Acclimatation, December 1967.

GENESIS & HISTORY

SOFT WATCHES

WHAT IS A COPY?

A copy is a more or less faithful reproduction of an original work of art, whether painting, sculpture, drawing or engraving.

A copy is to be distinguished from a forgery, which is an imitation of an artist's work or style made with fraudulent intent.

The practice of copying has been documented since antiquity: several marble replicas of Myron's Discobolus are the only evidence of the bronze original that has disappeared, or the Alexander Mosaic, a copy of a 4th-century fresco attributed to Philoxena of Eretria.

Copies can be used for a variety of purposes: for pleasure, to own a reproduction of an original hand-made work, for learning the fine arts, for training artists by copying the works of past masters, or for conservation reasons to preserve an original that is too fragile, as was done with Lascaux II for the cave paintings in the Lascaux caves, for example.

> But at what point do we talk about copying without originality, or even counterfeiting and forgery?